Top Priority In Congress

Legislators Open Session Beset With Space Age Issues

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7 (P-Congress embarked on its first space age session Tuesday in an atmosphere of grave concern over Russia's scientific strides.

That defense matters would get top billing was pointed up a few hours after the session opened. President Eisenhower forwarded to the Senate and House an emergency request for $1,260,000,000 in new funds to speed missile development and expand air de-

The supplemental money request, for the current fiscal year that ends June 30, also called for transfer to the missile program and related projects of an additional 110 million dollars already appropriated.

Pulsing through actions, predictions and prayers at the opening of the new session was a grim realization of a need to meet a massive military threat posed by Russian advances with missiles and space satellites.

Against that threat, Senate Republican Leader Knowland of California predicted that President Eisenhower will offer to Congress and the people a constructive series of suggestions strong enough to answer the Soviet chal-

Eisenhower will lay down the defense part of his program in a State of the Union message to be delivered to a joint Senate-House session Thursday. Details of his domestic program will be held back for a message next Monday proposing a balanced budget of around 74 billion dollars for the fiscal year starting next July 1, and a boost in defense spending or around two billions.

On the surface, members of Senate and House were as jovial and jaunty as usual for start of a new session. They whacked backs, grabbed hands, and chattered in noisy staccato. Underneath, they bonus to Korean War veterans. The governor's list of appointments was submitted at that time but the Senate leadership said it had insufficient time to consider the qualifications of nominees.

The one-day session was recessed until today. The regular 1958 session opens tomorrow at 12 noon.

The 30-day session opening tomorrow ordinarily would consider only the annual budget, but Underwood in his call expanded the agenda to include roads and schools in a way that may necessitate additional financing for such state services.

Today's Senate action was construed as political evidence that feuding between the administrative and legislative branches would be resumed on a par with last year.

"here was no positive statement from any source as to the grounds on which any of the three Senate rejections was based. It was recalled, however, that Dorman, from Tucker County, as in the news last year by reason of _ public hearings and investigations which he conducted at Huntington State Hospital and at the Industrial School for Girls at Salem.

Tragic Ironies And The Arab Refugees

More persons to take care of, less money with which to take care of them. This threatened to be the tragedy in the problem of the Arab refugees from Israel-held Palestine as the year 1958 got under way.

The U.N. Agency caring for the refugees has budgeted $41 million to pend on them this year -$26 million just to keep them alive, $15 million for "rehabilitation" - to make as many as possible self-supporting. But the outlook is gloomy for the $41 million-indeed, not too good for the $26 million just for relief.

The United States can't furnish all that's needed, for we are limited to providing 70 per cent of the total. And the tragic irony of the situation is that if Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold can scrape up only $26 million altogether, nothing will go for rehabilitation, so that more than ever the problem will become self-perpetuating.

The number of the Arab refugees is about 950,000 and that's just about the number of Jewish immigrants into Israel since 1948, when the Arabs (from whatever cause) emigrated out of what is now Israel. "See," say the Arab states to the Israeli, "if you could take in 950,000 outsiders, you could have taken the 950,000 refugees back." Also: "You plan to take in 100,000 more a year from the outside, so even now you could absorb the refugees in nine years."

"See," say the Israeli to the Arab states, "if we with our small area could absorb 950,000 newcomers, you with your large total area could absorb the 950,000 refugees. They'd be of you and for you, just as the 950,000 we took in had to be of us and for us." So the argument goes round and round, and comes out, not here, not there, but nowhere.

These Days

By George E. Sokolsky

Browder And America

Earl Browder was for so many years the leader of the Communist Party of America and that party was so influential under his leadership that his lectures at Rutgers University on "Karl Marx and America," are worthy of more than passing attention.

The very first paragraph of the introduction sets

"The theories of Karl Marx provide the basic concepts and ideas for the intellectual life of about one-third of the world's population. Among another one-third they e ert a strong influence. Only in America has the direct influence of Marxism declined since the War."

In some respects, one might ask, has not the direct influence of Karl Marx declined more rapidly in Soviet Russia than in any other part of the world? Surely, there is no room in Marx's philosophy for the imperialism of Soviet Russia, a system adapted from the Prussian Treitschke who conceived the system of satellites for the emerging German Empire of the Kaisers. Also, Marx never favored the restoration of autocracy in Russia, the autocracy of such a one as Ivan the Terrible, as practiced first by Stalin and now by Khrushchev. Also, it might be suggested for discussion whether Marx could ever have believed in the total subordination of the individual to the state, even temporarily, a system so characteristic of Leninism or of the condition of permanent war which Stalin and his successors developed as their means of statecraft.

Browder, to a degree, answers my queries in the "Leninism and Stalinism are not so much a further development and unfolding of Marxist theory as they are the consequence of a Marxist dilemma - that of men compelled by circumstances, and against their own long-held intellectual convictions, to undertake to build socialism in one of the most backward countries, while the most advanced of industrial nations remain capitalist. Lenin did not see and embrace this dilemma in 1917, when he led in the adoption of socialism as the practical program of the Russian Revolution.

"Lenin, as all Russian Marxists of that time, regardless of other or later divergences, understood the Russian Revolution as a prelude or trigger to the Socialist Revolution in Western Europe and in particular Germany, in which Russia would join as an important but subordinate part . . .

Lenin was undoubtedly astounded by the Bolshevik success in Soviet Russia, but even more by the failure of the industrial workers of Western Europe and America to respond to his success by calling general strikes and resorting to revolutionary acts in a joyous response to the proletarian revolution in Russia. I recall that at the moment of the Russian Revolution, the Smolny was full of talk of what was going to happen throughout the world, but nothing happened. Big Bill Haywood, on whom the Bolsheviks depended in the United States, was in prison here. Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxembourg were unable to develop a Bolshevik revolution in Germany and before long the split between the German and Russian parties became Browder's freedom from Communist Party disci pline has undoubtedly opened his mind to the errors of a system of which he was so long a servant. However, it must be remembered that as the proponent of American exceptionalism, he was the author of nationalistic Communism which Tito adopted and is now abandoning. Long before the Communists kicked Browder out of their party, his insistence upon American exceptionalism indicated a break with the Kreinlin hierarchy. Only World War II delayed his expulsion

His excommunication dramatically established the fact that the American Communist Party was not controlled by Americans; it was a branch of the Kremlin under some kind of ideological control by the Frenchman, Jacques Duclos.

Browder's exceptionalism he restates in this pam-the distinctive achievement of America was the abolition of almost all the remnants of pre-capitalist political and economic institutions and practices. The one conspicuous exception was slavery until the Civil War, and its remnants for another century. . . . Despite this anachronism, the United States is the unique example of a great nation which, from its founding, proceeded to sweep away antiquated institutions and folkways incompatible with the needs of modern society. Thus America had the 'purist' capitalism, that is, it had the smallest intermixture of semi-feudal remnants. should control the educational of the country, and may be the states and cities have indeed blundered beyond repair but there is no proof of it. The customary way before embarking on such a revolutionary change in policy on a fundamental question is for Congress or the state legislatures to make a thorough investigation, fix the blame, and point out the courses that should be followed.

For in a memorandum issued at the White House a few days ago by the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, it is stated that "one out of five students in the upper fourth of their class drops out of high school before graduation." The official document further says:

"Many intellectually able young people drop out of school chiefly because of lack of desire or incentive for education, or lack of money to pay for it."

No one has come forth to explain why these students who could afford to go on with their education didn't have the incentive to do so. Who is to blame?

Sideglances at celebs -

The pearly teeth of Dick Nixon, the V.P., chattered like castanets during his stay in New York this past frigid weekend. Seems that at a recent dinner at the Alibi Club in Washington he leaned against a freshly painted wall and much of it came off on his overcoat. It is the only one he owns. He sent it to the cleaners and wore his topcoat to the big city, only to run into the year's coldest weather.

Nixon, his wife Pat, and their old friends the Roger Johnsons of Whittier, Calif., took in two shows while here - "The Dark at The Top of The Stairs," which they found distressing, and "The Music Man," which delighted them. The Nixons ate at Luchow's, a favorite of theirs, and Le Pavillon, whose prices brought gulps and whose food produced bravos. And little wonder. There isn't a good restaurant in Wash-

The Air Force has backed off from its intention, momentarily, but there is no doubt that it will provide such transportation for Nixon in the near future, and for President Eisenhower, too, if he wants it. At the moment, Ike doesn't, or, at least, his Secret Service people don't like the Queen Elizabeth II's worst time in America, of course, was at the football game between Maryland and North Carolina. Recently, she described the ordeal to a friend:

"I sat next to the Governor of Maryland - McKeldin - and he became very excited despite all the delays on the field," she related. "He was never able to explain to me why one of the quarters, which I had been promised lasted only 15 minutes, ran 32 minutes on my watch.

'But I learned a lot about American history during the delays," Her Majesty said. "Governor McKeldin had a great number of documents under his seat, and whenever there was a pause in the proceedings he would reach down and come up with such things as a copy of the Declaration of Independence, the Maryland State Charter, the American Bill of Rights and so forth. Vandegrift Bids Low On ABL Addition

Administration Unit Will Be Expanded

The John I. Vandegrift Company of Cumberland submitted the low bid of $26,915 to build a second floor addition to the ad ministration building of Allegany Ballistics Laboratory here, a Naval spokesman in Norfolk, Va., reported yesterday.

Only two bids were received. The other, for $32,243, was submitted by Atlantis Construction Company, of Wantagh, Long Island, N. Y.

Bids were opened yesterday afternoon by the District Public Works Office, Fifth Naval District, at the Norfolk Navy base.

The increased office space has been sought for some time to meet the needs of the added personnel at the Pinto plant operated by Hercules Powder Company for the Navy.

ABL is one of two companies making the third stage rocket for the Vanguard missile. The other firm is the Grand Central Company, of California.

The addition will be 38 by 62 feet and will consist of masonry walls, dry wall interior partitions, acoustical tile ceilings, insulation, steel bar joists, metal decking, a built-up roof and steel fire

Concrete work, heating, electrical, painting and incidental work is included in the contract.
